

Constanza Argentieri

Constanza is a strong defender of the rights of marginalized people and her commitment is to ensure that these communities reach higher levels of equality and inclusion.

She has dedicated her professional career to the defense and protection of human rights. From various management and leadership roles - in the Human Rights Secretariat (Argentina), the MERCOSUR Institute of Public Policies on Human Rights, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (United States), and the Civil Association for Equality and Justice (Argentina) - she has contributed to the consolidation of public policies and regulations that promote the rights of migrants, children and adolescents, people with disabilities, LGBTI community; women; and indigenous peoples.

A lawyer by training and with a commitment to technical rigor, Constanza has contributed in her professional journey with the knowledge and experiences acquired in the Master in Human Rights and Humanitarian Law carried out at American University (United States) and in various postgraduate courses carried out in Latin America and Europe.

In addition, she has published various articles on human rights and structural inequality and enjoys her role as a teacher at the University of Buenos Aires and other academic institutions in the Global South.

She lives in Buenos Aires, a city that she loves to walk and enjoy with her family.
