

Sergio Debandi

Sergio is committed to the fight against inequality, racism and xenophobia. As part of his career, he has worked in management, community intervention and academia in pursuit of a more plural and democratic society and public policies based on situated knowledge and a human rights approach.

A sociologist in his undergraduate and doctoral studies, today he works as a researcher and professor in national science institutions and national universities in Argentina, where he leads and integrates projects on knowledge production, urban inequality, planning and human mobility.

As part of his professional career, he has been a consultant for international organizations in the design of indicators and evaluation systems in human rights, migration and refugee population.

In his search, he chose the Argentine Patagonia as his place in the world to settle with his family, from where he intervenes, works and thinks as part of his understanding of the world from the South of the South.
